Wooden Rat Trap

A pest control classic

Of course there are more modern types of traps, but wooden rat traps are still the most popular way to catch the rodents. The material has a great advantage: it is biodegradable. In case the trap is not meant to be reused, it can simply be disposed of with the household rubbish without burdening our environment with plastic. Cleaning a rodent trap is not everyone's cup of tea.

As a synanthropic species, rats can often be found in the direct vicinity of human settlements. As carriers of diseases and food storage pests, they are unwelcome here and their population must be controlled. Chocolate and hazelnut spread or peanut butter can be used as bait. Simply put the bait into the trough, place the trap on the pathway of the rat (they run usually alongside walls) and tension it.
